DETAILED ACTION

1. This communication is responsive to Amendment C, filed 3/2/04.
2. Claims 1-5 are pending in this application. Claims 1, 3, 5 are independent claims. In the Amendment C, claims 1 and 3 were amended. This action is made Non-Final.
3. The text of those sections of Title 35, U.S. Code not included in this action can be found in a prior Office action.

Allowable Subject Matter

4. The indicated allowability of claims 2, 4 and 5 is withdrawn in view of the newly discovered reference(s) to Ramaley et al. (US 6,687,741 B1). Rejections based on the newly cited reference(s) follow.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

5. Claims 1-5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lavendel et al. ("Lavendel", US 6,587,129 B1).

As per claim 1, Lavendel teaches a user interface for controlling peripheral devices comprising: a peripheral option display generated by the peripheral device's device-specific options driver software (col. 6, lines 40-45; col. 7, lines 28-31; col. 8, lines 1-16; dynamically-loadable device driver software providing specific device user interface corresponding to device-specific peripheral) for presenting peripheral device-specific peripheral options to a user immediately following selection of a peripheral device in an independent vendor's PC application (fig. 7; "ScanGear" is an independent vendor's PC application; in addition, vendors of different peripheral device provides their own device driver corresponding to its device user interface to the device interface object 50), wherein said peripheral option display includes a peripheral device-specific user interface (figs. 10a and 10b; col. 11, lines 54 et seq.).

Although Lavendel teaches the command selection for a peripheral device to be made by selecting, from a tab command bar, a command tab having specific control description (col. 3, lines 32-36 and lines 44-46), Lavendel does not teach the tab command bar to show icons. However, Official Notice is taken that the use of icons on command bars is notoriously well known in the art. It would have been obvious to an artisan at the time of the invention to combine such a feature with the command bar of Lavendel in order to give users quick visual identification of available commands.

Claim 3 is similar in scope to claim 1, and is therefore rejected under similar rationale. Lavendel does not expressly disclose the vendor's PC application to include access to a printer as a secondary function. However, Official Notice is taken that the printer function is well known in the art. It would have been obvious to an artisan at the time of the invention to include such a feature with Lavendel's user interface so that users would have quick and easy access to the printing function, e.g. from within the editing user interface as shown in fig. 7, for printing and validating the edited image.

6. Claims 2, 4 and 5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lavendel et al. ("Lavendel", US 6,587,129 B1) in view of Ramaley et al. ("Ramaley", US 6,687,741 B1).

As per claim 2, Lavendel does not teach the user interface to include a bypass function for deselecting said peripheral option display. Ramaley teaches an user interface which includes a bypass function for deselecting an option display (col. 8, lines 35-38). It would have been obvious to an artisan at the time of the invention to combine Ramaley's teaching with Lavendel's user interface in order to bypass the option display if the user does not want to be presented with the option display again in the future.

Claims 4 and 5 are individually similar in scope to claim 2, and are therefore rejected under similar rationale.

Response to Arguments

7. Applicant's remarks/arguments with respect to claims 1 and 3 have been considered but are not persuasive. Applicant remarked that based on the interview conducted between the Applicant's representative and the Examiner on July 31, 2003, it was indicated by the Examiner that if the claim language were amended to differentiate the dialog box of the application peripheral user interface from the claimed device-specific driver user interface, the claims would be distinguishable over the applied prior art.

However, upon reviewing the claim language of the amended claims, it appears to the Examiner that the claims as amended are still read on by the previously applied prior art, namely the Lavendel et al. reference. As cited in the rejection, the device-specific user interface is generated and provided by the vendor's PC application to the device interface object 50, which manages the dynamically loadable device driver software to provide specific device user interface corresponding to its device-specific peripheral. It is also noted that Lavendel's

"ScanGear" user interface shown in fig. 7 reads on the claim language of "independent vendor's PC application".
